Cities are growing rapidly, with over 70% of the global population expected to live in urban areas by 2050. People move to cities for work, education, and better living conditions, creating vibrant but complex urban spaces shaped by migration, globalization, and technological change. This seminar explores the role of religion in urban life. Focusing on Christianity and Islam in German cities, we examine how faith and spirituality influence everyday life, how urban diversity shapes religious practice, and invite discussion on global perspectives and personal experiences of religion in contemporary cities.
