September 28th - October 2nd 2026

1-week Winter School: Layers of Memory: Weimar, Buchenwald, and German Remembrance Culture

Memory culture shapes how societies understand their past and its relevance for the present. In this seminar, we explore forms and political dimensions of remembrance in Germany, with a focus on the crimes of National Socialism. A key component is a visit to the Buchenwald Memorial. We will engage with the history of the concentration camp and reflect on the role of memorial sites in Germany today. How is history conveyed, and how does remembrance contribute to democracy and human rights?
The seminar invites critical reflection on memory, responsibility, and their significance for contemporary society.

Travel advice: STUBE will cover the costs for the journey from Nuremberg to Weimar and back with Deutsche Bahn ICE. A ticket has already been booked and is included in your participation fee. You will receive further information about arrival and departure times after registration. The participation fee (€40) covers all costs for meals, accommodation, and travel.

Speakers: This Seminar takes place in cooperation with STUBE-Ost.

Forests in Transition: Between Exploitation and Conservation

Forests worldwide are undergoing profound change. They regulate climate, store carbon, protect soils, and provide habitat for diverse species, but are increasingly affected by climate change, intensive land use, pests, and extreme weather. This seminar explores forests as dynamic yet vulnerable ecosystems, with a focus on developments in Germany within a global context. We examine impacts on ecosystems, societies, and economies, and discuss sustainable forest management. A field walk with a forester offers practical insights into current challenges and strategies. The seminar also links these issues to the Sustainable Development Goals and considers the ecological, political, and societal changes needed to protect forests in the future.

Travel advice: Our accomodation is somewhat remote—which is ideal for the program but requires careful planning of your arrival. From the train station in Coburg, the last bus of the day departs at 4:31 pm (earlier buses run hourly). This means that only students who can reliably catch this connection—taking work or other commitments into account—will be able to attend the seminar. We strongly recommend allowing some buffer time at Coburg station.

Water as a Human right

Water is essential for life – yet for billions of people it is far from guaranteed. Although access to clean drinking water is recognized as a human right, it is shaped worldwide by political power relations, economic interests, and ecological crises that determine who has access and who is excluded. This seminar explores global inequalities in water access and examines the role of climate change, privatization, resource extraction, and industrial agriculture. Using concrete case studies from the Global South, we discuss the impacts on Indigenous communities, smallholder farmers, and marginalized groups, as well as the responsibilities of states, international institutions, and corporations. Together, we reflect on water as a public good, a human right, and a contested resource – and develop perspectives for global justice and more equitable water governance.

Winter School: Global Agriculture in Transition: Balancing Food Security and Sustainability

Agriculture is at the heart of some of today's most pressing global challenges: feeding a growing population, addressing climate change, protecting biodiversity, and ensuring social justice in food systems. This seminar explores how agricultural systems around the world are changing under the pressures of environmental degradation, economic globalization, and shifting consumption patterns. You will examine the tensions between productivity, food security, and sustainability, with a particular focus on the impacts of industrial agriculture and the potential of alternative approaches such as agroecology and regenerative farming. Through global case studies, we discuss the social, ecological, and political dimensions of agricultural transformation and reflect on pathways toward more resilient and equitable food systems.

30,00 € Fee
